

COVID-19 was an extraordinary catalyst for change. The health, social, economic disruptions it brought reverberated across multiple systems forcing all sectors to pivot to meet the unique challenges it brought. Rebuilding from pandemic's disruptions requires the laying of a foundation for a resilient and inclusive economy to ensure that future economic shocks do not have the same level of catastrophic impact that the COVID-19 crisis had. Key lessons learned from the pandemic are the need for cooperation across sectors to manage the shared challenges and technology and innovation's role to advance solutions. Policymakers and business leaders are now making innovation and technology a part of strategic decision-making and forward planning. For the Philippines whose economic momentum has been greatly affected by the pandemic, partnerships and technology and innovation have become critical components to resetting the economy and sustaining and accelerating growth to recover lost grounds and catch up with Ambisyon 2040's goal to become a middle-income economy in 20 years. What are the imperatives for the country to enhance the ecosystem for innovation to flourish?
